Each of the above magazines has a unique "personality" — this is the strength of the true "little magazine." Certain sponsored magazines have been trying to convince themselves and the public that they are little magazines and hence deserving of the mantle of "glorious irresponsible—responsibility" common to the true little magazines. Amusing? With certain of the above, Wormwood feels a distinct rapport, but Wormwood does not condemn the others. These are changing times, and only history can indicate which ones were most vital — but this supposes an interested and actively discriminating audience now! We must have a slogan? OK. "Think big — buy LITTLE magazines, you'll be glad-sad-mad you did."
